WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1744.

Yesterday arrived a Mail from Flanders.

Extract of a Private Letter from Vienna, Feb. 1.

'THE Death of so great a Man, 'as all the World allowed the 'late Veldt-Marshal Khevenhuller to be, must naturally 'awaken the Curiosity of all 'Degrees of People, and more 'in Proportion Foreigners, and 'such as are little acquainted 'with any but the last Acts of 'his Life, than those who knew throughly the entire History of that Hero. Lewis Andrew de Khevenhuller was born on the 1st of December, 1683; and having received an Education every Way worthy of his Birth, entered early into the Service; having, at the Time of his Decease, been upwards of Forty Years an Officer in the Armies of the House of Austria. He had served on all the several Theatres of War which had been opened during that Space of Time, and served always with unblemished Reputation. He was always upon good Terms with his Generals under whom he served; for he had a Temper that enabled him to bear Mistakes, and yet differed, even Men of the fiercest Dispositions, from behaving towards him in such a Manner, as that it might be considered as an Affront. But it was with Prince Eugene of Savoy that he lived in the greatest Intimacy. There was, indeed, such a Correspondence between their Tempers, as made them inseparable Friends. From him Count Khevenhuller learned the Art of War; which may be said with the greater Propriety, since even those Generals considered it in that Light, and always practised it as a Science built upon certain Maxims, and governed by certain Rules. These had been improved by Count Khevenhuller to the last Degree of Perfection; and it is but an Act of Justice due to his Memory, to say, that there never was a General, ancient or modern, who better understood the Oeconomy of War than he. His Army was equally well provided in the Field, and in Quarters; for Count Khevenhuller knew exactly what was necessary, how much was to be provided, and how applied; so that with him Things were never in Confusion, but every one in his Duty, and wanted for nothing.

'His Care and Circumspection, joined to his Vigilance and prudent Dispositions, enabled him to ruin the superior Armies of the French and Bavarians, who were often without Fighting, and their Troops consumed, without so much as undertaking a Siege. At the Close of the last Campaign upon the Rhine, his Views were disappointed, from his not having the Disposition of those Things in his Power, which were necessary to the Accomplishment of his Designs. He was as able in the Cabinet as in the Camp, and knew how to manage the Interest of Princes, as well as to marshal Armies in the Field. He arrived at all the various Honours he possessed, by the Means which would have acquired them in any other Man, for he owed little to Fortune, all to Merit; yet the Recital of his Titles sufficiently shew his Care of his Private Fortune, and the Extent of his Publick Character. He had added to his Paternal Estate, but not greatly. He was frugal in Regard to Money, and covetous only of Reputation. Besides his Paternal Honours, he was Count of Aiche, and Franckenburg, Baron of Landseron and Wernberg, Lord of Osterwitz and Carsberg, Hereditary High-Steward of Carinthia, Knight of the Golden Fleece, Councilor of State, Vice-President of the Council of War, Field-Marshal of the Queen's Armies, Commander in Chief of the Forces in the Kingdom of Sclavonia, and in the Duchy of Sirmia, Colonel of a Regiment of Dragoons, Governor of the City of Vienna, &c. He married, in the Year 1718, Philippina-Maria-Josepha, Countess of Lamberg.

'He deceased nine Minutes after 11 at Night, on the 8th of January, 1744, at the Age of 60 Years, one Month, and 25 Days. His Corpse was exposed for three Days, on a Bed of State, dressed in Crimson Velvet, with a Blue Waistcoat trimmed with Silver, which is the Uniform of his Regiment. There were an Abundance of Wax-Candles about the Bed, on which he lay by his Side, his Cane, his Sword, his Breast-Star, and the Collar of the Order of the Golden Fleece. The Apartment was hung with Black, and there were several Altars in the Room, where Masses were said every Morning. On the 28th and 29th at Noon, all the Bells in the City tolled for an Hour. At Seven in the Evening the Funeral Procession began; the Corpse was carried in an open Chariot, drawn by six 'Horses, attended on each Side by 12 White Flambeaux. 'He was attended to the Grave by all his Domesticks, 'his Relations, the Nobility, General Officers, and other 'Persons of Distinction in this City. He was interred 'in the Church of our Lady, near the College of the 'Scottish Benedictines; before which Church a great Detachment of our Garison was drawn up under Arms, 'their Drums beating and Colours flying; and when 'the Corpse was let down into the Vault, they fired 'three Vollies of Small Arms, which concluded the 'Ceremony.'

Ratisbon, February 6. Great Preparations are making by the Austrians throughout the Electorate of Bavaria, for the ensuing Campaign; and almost all the Regiments of Infantry are, pursuant to the Queen's last Order, completed to 3000 Men each. Vast Magazines are forming on the Frontiers of Suabia, and, according to the best Computation we can make from these Preparations, the Army that is to assemble on this Side, cannot fall short of 70,000 Men. It is said, that the Imperial Court meditates a Diversion, in order to oblige the Austrians to quit Bavaria of themselves; but how this is to be brought about, in the Circumstances Things are in at this Juncture, surpasses our Understanding; but a few Weeks must necessarily explain it.

Cologn, February 11. The Comet which has been observed here since the 5th or 6th of January, and in Sweden since the beginning of December, is already equal to a Star of the first Magnitude; and will continue to increase till the 5th of March next, when it will be in its Perigeon. As it was observed on the 16th of last Month at Petersburgh with a Telescope that magnified 110 Times, the Head thereof appeared to be composed of a Nucleus, surrounded by a very thick dark Atmosphere. The Nucleus shone but with a very faint Light, and appeared to have about two-thirds of the Diameter of the Disk of Saturn. Half the Diameter of its Tail appeared to be equal to six Diameters of the Nucleus. Its Motion is very slow. It has not moved hitherto above half a Degree in 24 Hours; perhaps it will move quicker in a few Days, but not much, and this quick Motion will not last long. It is at present among the four Stars of Pegasus, and will, this Evening, be nearest to the Star Marcah.
